

European migration

The demographic divide is relevant to long-term business planning and is a strategic risk management issue. Global companies also need to consider the potential effect in the short term if there is the potential for governments to change their approach because of this. This can give rise to changing political risks. Also, it can create new business opportunities that will require appropriate identification and management of other risks for a company to be successful in such a new market'

Chris McGloin, vice-president of risk management and insurance at Invensys

